The Internet is an amazing place, but finding useful information is a struggle for many students. Here are some tips on how to find the best sites for your needs and behavior.

The first site for English teachers to check out is www.ncte.org. It has a wealth of information on current issues, resources, and new ideas. For example, the site offers links to websites of important organizations, collected sites on topics, lesson plans, and much more.

You can sign up for a free newsletter, and articles are free and designed for easy reading. Kathy’s Guide for Educators, funded by Henry L. Summers, is similar to this site. Their site offers links to websites of important organizations and collected sites on topics, lesson plans, and much more.

Welcome to Chalkboard

If you are receiving Chalkboard the first time, welcome! Chalkboard is the quarterly newsletter of the Oregon Council of Teachers of English, which welcomes new members to the group.

Chalkboard is a free resource for English teachers who wish to keep abreast of news, views, and teaching ideas and to engage with the community. We welcome submissions from all members of the community. Articles, reviews, book clubs, and calendar events are welcome.

You can find out more about us on the website, and we encourage you to sign up for our free newsletter.
